I can't save every racist, anti-black thing people send me because I'd run out of space, but I do have a pretty sizeable collection receipts of folks being blatantly hateful.

It's interesting juxtaposing messages against each other and seeing how bigots really do say the same things over and over again, but believe they are being novel.

One day I'm gonna make a space specifically for all these shots so folks can see how a common thread on the fedi is just plain racism.

And this in alleged progressive spaces. This is from people who have experienced some form of marginalization from being a woman, gay, trans, etc etc.

It's kind of remarkable how quickly people express some experience about being treated poorly because of their identity revert to very common racist tropes when they feel threatened.

A lot of times I cannot differentiate between a conservative white dude and a trans white woman b/c of how quickly they fall back on the same type of racism.

I think about intersections a lot because I want to have a high level of understanding when it come to how bigotry intersects so I can be more effective at building communal spaces.

I often find myself disappointed in white progressives b/c not only do they not see the value in our common struggle, but will violently defend their whiteness if one doesn't prioritize theirs specifically.

And this is the reaction of any common racist. Valuing their humanity above all is a core pillar of racism.

Laying out receipts from progressive white folks and comparing them to random bigots in the context where we don't see eye to eye is an interesting exercise because not just how similar they are, but many are almost verbatim.

Same posture, same tone, same aggression, hell even the same language in many cases.

It's just interesting seeing how much the views of people who profess to be far left are parallel to folks who are far right.

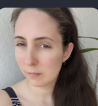

The similarities are... striking.

@Are0h A black woman made a post on instagram that really spoke to me and opened my eyes. She said that it is not possible to "use white privilege for good" because the only thing white folk should be doing is giving up their racial privilege entirely. Using it at all maintains it.

I have been leaving most white anglo american liberal spaces behind because of the issues you are pointing out and because I realized they also maintain systems that keep systemic racism going.

@meskarune Hm, that is a fair point.

@Are0h i can only talk from observation here on the Internet, not from lived experience in the US, since...i'm not (from) there, and i'll only speak for white trans women:

white trans women need to confront their history, and realise that they are standing on the shoulders of black giants

they need to stop talking about violence as though it affects them the same and they need to deconstruct their white male socialisation, before/instead of practicing radical softness uwu

@Are0h because as soon as their bullshit is challenged, they will go all, how dare you (other) attack my femininity, my softness (whiteness), i will destroy u now and honestly, that shit can go.

@meena The funny part is that the part where they feel attacked is only their interpretation of something they usually instigate.

I find many white folks no matter how they identify are so aggressive with their opinions as if they are prepared for a fight that really doesn't exist.

And the origin of this stance is usually the biases they hold against Black folks.

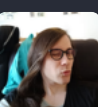

It's almost like they need to create a problem to justify some unspoken belief.
